Borders

Echo patterns can be enhanced by pairing with a matching border for floor applications - they can add splendour to a more ornate pattern, whilst adding interest to the minimal. On a practical level, borders can play an important role in bridging the echo pattern and the adjoining area. Bespoke borders are also an option; using the various shapes available in the range you can create the perfect frame for your design.

Technical Data

Marble is a crystalline, metamorphic rock that was once originally limestone. Great pressure transforms the limestone into a hard, crystalline rock that can be worked and polished. White in its pure form, impurities form veins of many colours and make each slab unique. As a material, marble is tactile and strong, imbued with both emotion and cultural relevance. It has a valuable and versatile quality, finding application in luxury interiors and modern setting.

Colour variations are an inherent and desirable feature of marble, and should be used as such. Variations can exist in colour, crystalline composition, veining, fossil deposits and mineral activity.

Hand Crafted & Checked

The natural beauty of marble is enhanced by highly specialised stone cutting and finishing equipment in the trusted hands of expert Robel craftsmen. From the quarry to the workshop, every single slab is especially chosen for its quality and the tiles meticulously hand-checked in order to achieve perfection, and only then released from Robel's facilities.

Dimensions & Sizes

The shapes and sizes in Echo have been designed to work with each other to create an eclectic selection of patterns, as well as give scope for new bespoke designs. The smaller size of each shape is the minimum we would recommend, any less and the edges of each piece will be sensitive to chipping and damage. There is no limit to how large each piece can be as our marble is cut from large blocks from the quarry.

Tiling Instructions

All orders must be examined on delivery and any shortages, damages or other discrepancies must be noted on the delivery note and reported within 48 hours (photographic evidence required).

It is normal to have 5% of minor damage such as edge chipping, due to the process of packing and unpacking when checking your stone - it is common practice to use these tiles for cuts when installing natural stone tiles.

Careful handling of the stone will prevent chipping, etc. - tiles should always be stacked and stored carefully (larger tiles should be stacked on edge, vertically) but not on a hard surface as this can cause edge chipping.

Marble tiles have varying industry standards for size tolerances and can vary from stone to stone and size to size. The tolerance can range from 1-5mm dependent on the marble and size. An accomplished natural stone tiler will ensure tiles are spaced correctly. When installing stone, dry laying and blending from crate to crate are very important. Sealing your stone is strongly recommended.

Always ensure that the marble is completely dry before sealing. Please note that sealing is not fail-safe; some degradation may still occur.

It is advised to use quality fixing products when installing natural stone.

Note: Make sure your tiler complies with British Standards BS 5385.

Care of Marble

Robel advises that marble, like all natural stone is porous and therefore requires treatment of varying types to ensure it always looks at its best – sealants are used to ensure stone tiles are resistant to stains.

Specialist advice should be taken in order to tailor the care of Echo products to the particular environment.
